

Co-creative Transactional Analysis

Trainer: Keith Tudor PhD, TSTA

Workshop, 30th May 2021 in Dunedin

THE PHYSIS
INSTITUTE

Co-creative transactional analysis emphasises the “co” (mutual, joint) aspect of professional relationships, whether therapeutic, educative, and/or consultative – and, by implication, of personal relationships. The “co” of co-creative acknowledges the transactional, inter-relational, mutual, joint, and co-operative, as well as partnership. The word “creative” is an intentional reference to what is original, imaginative, intuitive and spontaneous about the encounter between human beings. Together, the suffix and the root word describe what emerges between therapist, practitioner, supervisor and client.

In this workshop, and in conjunction with the participants, Keith will present the principles of co-creative transactional analysis, the philosophical influences on its development, and some recent research on the qualities of co-creative as well as its contribution to contemporary relational theory and practice. There will be opportunities for discussion, demonstrations, presentation of clinical and other material, and small group work.

After the workshop, there will be a book launch of Keith’s latest book – Claude Steiner, Emotional Activist (Routledge, 2020) – and an opportunity to buy some of Keith’s other books (further details to follow).

Venue: Alexander McMillan Room, Community House, 301 Moray Place, Dunedin.

Dates and time: 9am – 4.30pm, 30th May 2021
